Presenters

Matt Maling is a specialist construction lawyer and leads Lane Neave's building and construction team. He likes to engage early and gain a detailed understanding of his client's drivers, project details, risks and the market in order to provide strategic project advice that is best for the project and the client's particular needs.

Andrew Skelton has 25 years' experience as a civil and commercial litigator in New Zealand and the United Kingdom. Andrew has appeared as counsel in the courts at first instance and appellate levels and in specialist tribunals. He also has significant ADR experience particularly in arbitration and mediation.

Graeme Christie specialises in property and construction law. He has more than 30 years' experience of acting for principals, consultants, contractors, and subcontractors. He provides advice on a wide range of construction issues, including structuring and contract documentation, joint venture agreements, alliancing, partnering, guaranteed maximum price contracts, and code compliance. He also assists clients to resolve construction disputes by means of negotiated settlements, mediation, arbitration, adjudication and litigation.

Jo-Anne Knight has over 20 years' experience acting for contractors, principals, local authorities and consultants in the full range of building and infrastructure disputes. Jo-Anne also advises in the negotiation and drafting of construction contracts with particular emphasis on the allocation of risks within construction contracts, security arrangements and providing tailored mechanisms for avoiding disputes and managing disputes that cannot be avoided in the most effective manner suitable to the particular project or industry.

With chair, construction specialist, Rebecca Saunders
